General Patterson then read the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with feelings of deepest sorrow and mortification that we have learned of the serious, if not mortal, injuries to our President, James A. Garfield, at the hand of an enemy to this people; that at all times and at all places assassinations and attempts at the same are to be deplored as subversive of personal security and morality; but most especially in this exhibition of want of regard for human life has a fearful blow been given our common country in that the objective point of it was, and is, our embodiment of popular liberty and security.

prominent citizens of all classes and political predilections. At the appointed time Colonel Josiah Patterson walked to the front and addressed the audience as follows:

REMARKS OF JOSIAH PATTERSON, ESQ.

FELLOW-CITIZENS—The American people are in the presence to-day of a great visitation, the attempt of the assassin on the life of the President of the United States. It has filled with horror the hearts of the people throughout the length of this great Republic. The abhorrence for the crime and abhorrence for the assassin is not confined to any section or locality, or any party or set of public. The abhorrence for the crime and abhorrence for the assassin is not confined to any section or locality, or any party or set of men, it finds expression in the hearts of all the American people. Fifty millions of people, by their unanimous verdict, give expression of their detestation for the assassin and for the infamous crime he has attempted to perpetrate. While we sympathize with a great citizen in his affliction, and grieve with his afflicted family, there is consolation in knowing that the assassin is isolated from all mankind, and particularly from all the American people, and stands out alone with fice if they cannot go about from point to point without fear of assassination? I know American people, and stands out alone with-out aid or without sympathy in his infamy and his crime. There is another consolation, every citizen under the sound of my voice will regret the cause that assembled us here to-night, and that all unite in the expression and its worthy of thought, that this great Republic in which we live, founded by our forefathers, erected upon constitutional prin-ciples and dedicated to liberty, is not depenof the hope that our President may still live. [Cheers.] I know, Mr. President, that the dispatches that have been received leave us almost without that hope, dent upon the life of any one citizen, no mat-ter how great or distinguished, or how belov-ed he be. You may send the leaden bullet but we cannot afford to give up of James A. Garfield. We feel that he belon

I have not despaired of it, Mr. President and fellow-citziens, I hope and I trust that all will see the necessity of keeping this government intact, of administering the laws with exact justice to all men. I thank great mass of American people, was not the Government. He was simply the servant of the people, and when he was stricken down the people then took his place, and the coun-try is preserved in all its branches, and from Robert J. Morgan, Colonel Luke Finlay and Attorney-General G. P. M. Turner, which were taken in full by our reporter, but owing the center of the country to its circumfer-ence, as I said before, in all its integrity. Now, gentlemen, with these few remarks, I present to you your permanent chairman, who has been selected to preside over this to the lateness of the hour we are unable to print them. All of them teemed with eulo-gies of the Presideut and the fervent wish that his life might yet be spared, and which met hearty responses of favor and approval met hearty responses of favor of the large crowd assembled. Washington to-day n what may result in the murder of our President, has no such significance as that which prompted the murder of the Czar of all the Russias. JUDGE J. W. CLAPP. advancing to the front of the platform, said: FELLOW-CITIZENS—We have assembled to Plain and brocaded parasols, with night under circumstances of peculiar so-lemnity. Throughout this land, from Maine to California, from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, I dare say thousands and millions of and without lace, and very handsome handles. American citizens have assembled in solem convocation, as we have here, who are now speaking of the great bereavement and stu-pendous calamity. the government to its center, where any change of rulers would awaken the people to alarming excitement, but here, beyond the shock and sorrow which such an occurrence would oc-casion, there would be no feeling of revolt or despair for the future of our country, Mr. Garfield was blessed in his life, blessed in the choice and love of his friends, and in his private life—and blessed in the admira-tion and confidence which the people of this nation had in the integrity of his administra-tion, but God in His inscrutable providence blasted these hopes and expectations. What is to come I do not know, but the people of the land are its rulers, and the government
